Representatives of the Wild Bird Trust of B.C. hosted a dedication day ceremony for the Corrigan Nature House March 1 at the Conservation Area at Maplewood Flats in North Vancouver. Those involved with the trust have worked over the last 21 years to restore and enhance the waterfront property, transforming it from a degraded industrial site to its current living classroom status. After many years of fundraising and thanks to the support of donors, the trust finally has a room of its own. At the dedication day event, those in attendance celebrated the launch of the space, which will be used for the trust's annual general meetings, community events and future school programs.
